Let's go: Seven unveils star-studded Glasgow 2026 campaign

Baker Boy delivers an exclusive anthem to fuel the Commonwealth Games

The Seven Network has unveiled its brand-new on-air promo for the Glasgow 2026 Commonwealth Games, set to the new, high-energy track Let's Go by Yolngu artist, Baker Boy.

Fronted by Australia's most revered sport broadcaster, Bruce McAvaney, the promo brings together a powerhouse line-up of Australian sporting talent, including Olympic and Commonwealth Games champion and Glasgow 2026 swimming mixed zone reporter, Ariarne Titmus, alongside Sunrise host and Commonwealth Games medallist Matt Shirvington.

The campaign also features a host of Australia's leading athletes bound for Glasgow, including Jessica Hull, Peter Bol, Kyle Chalmers, Nina Kennedy and Col Pearse, and many more.

Blending powerful archival moments with a spotlight on the next generation of stars, the promo celebrates Australia's rich Commonwealth Games legacy while building anticipation for Glasgow 2026, all set to a hype-track that will have everyone up on their feet and ready for the Games.

Published by Universal Music Publishing and released on Island Records/Universal Music Australia, Let's Go is co-written by Baker Boy and DNA aka David Musumeci and Anthony Egizii. Let's Go is available to listen and stream here.

A six-time ARIA Award winner, Baker Boy said: "I've never written a song specifically for a campaign before, so this was a new and really fun experience for me. I tapped into the idea of songs that pump me up before I jump on stage and wanted to create something that would give all the athletes that same level of energy before their events.

"It's all about the journey, the underdog and taking out the gold, while brushing off the competition along the way."
